"History matters: Game length realizations and cooperation in indefinitely repeated games"

We study the effect of match length realization in experiments on indefinitely repeated games. We demonstrate substantial effects and show that they can impact treatment comparisons in three applications. Our results have implications for the study of learning in games as well as for methodological considerations when designing experiments.

Talks and Research Visits

Florian Diekert presented the paper "The creation of social norms under weak institutions", co-authored with Tillmann Eymess, Joseph Luomba, and Israel Waichman, at the Norms and Behavioral Change workshop at the University of Pennsylvania on October 17, and at the research seminar at Duke University on October 21.
